Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: .Utah prospector depended on the food supply raised on the irrigated bench land to furnish him strength in drilling the mountain rocks. As the products of the irrigated farm increased and cheapened the food supply, the risk incurred in the miner s speculation decreased and thereby widened the sphere of that Industry, whose products in gold, silver, copper and lead in 1894 were valued at $n,631,402.72.1 In planning the route of railways, the largest traffic was found in the settlements having for their mainspring of commercial activity the irrigation canal. As these settlements increased in number, and better economies were introduced in the diversion and distribution of their water supplies, there was a greater need for transportation facilities for the increased surplus of fruit, grain and garden 1 First Triennial Report of State Statistician, 1895, 23. produce. To-day splendidly equipped railroads, with feeders extending in every direction throughout the State, attest the heavy traffic in agricultural exports and imported merchandise purchased with the surplus of the irrigated farms. Not only has this surplus increased as the land has become more intensely cultivated and better watered, but the small irrigation unit has tended to so diversify the irrigator s labors that cheese, butter and milk have become a substantial part of his annual income. It has been estimated that a cow fed on green alfalfa will produce fifty pounds of butter for each ton fed, and there is reason to believe this when it is considered that..
